GERMANS TRY TO EXCUSE KILLING OF MISS CAVELL

Say She Abused the Trust Placed in Her and Aided Escape of Prisoners.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 14.—An attempt to relieve German authorities of blame for the execution of the British nurse, Edith Cavell, in Brussels on Oct. 12, 1918, is made in an article printed in the Berlin Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, received here today.

The article says Edith Cavell, an assistant of Prince Reginald of Croix, abused the trust placed in her as one engaged in philanthropic work, by concealing officers and men of Allied nationalities until they could cross the frontier.

Miss Cavell's guide is said in the article to have conducted 500 men over the border. Sentence of death was imposed upon Miss Cavell by the court martial. It is asserted by an anonymous decision and the sentence was confirmed principally because the Germans held the nurse had been guilty of a breach of trust.

Charred Wing Found From James's Plane

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 14.—A portion of a wing of an airplane, with the end charred, was washed ashore at Cossey Beach, east of this harbor, yesterday. One theory held as to the disappearance of Capt. M. R. James, the British aviator, was that he fell into Long Island Sound after he had passed over this city.

Storm Holds Up Sound Steamer.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Aug. 14.—Passenger steamers Georgia and Cambridge, bound from New York to Providence, are tied up here on account of the storm. The boats battled with a sixty-mile gale in reaching this port.

WAR SOFTENS BRICKLAYER; WANTS A DRESSMAKER'S JOB

First Case on Record of War Failing to Make Fighter Harder and Tougher.

This doesn't sound like an echo of the war.

A man who has done his share of fighting, according to Major Warren Bigelow, Director of the Re-employment Bureau for Soldiers, Sailors and Airmen.

Marines, No. 508 Pearl Street, finds that the life made him too soft for his former occupation.

He used to be a bricklayer and now he wants to be a dressmaker. His plan is that his hands are now too soft to throw bricks and just about right to ply a needle and handle soft, clinging stuff they make dresses of.

Any lady dressmaker want a good, husky apprentice? This is the first case brought to public notice where the war has had any softening influence on any man.

EXPLOITING ARMY UNIFORM.

Artillery Officer Protests Against Fifth Avenue Sales.

Major C. E. Kilbourne, of the Coast Artillery Corps, today issued a protest against discharged soldiers in uniform selling books for a private concern. He says that men are now being utilized along Fifth Avenue for such purposes.

It is suggested by Maj. Kilbourne that the public refrain from making purchases from men in uniform and call attention to the War Department ban on exploitation of the uniform for private enterprise.

outclass all millinery elsewhere similarly priced

HERE are many women who make a rule of never spending more than $10.00 on a hat, and there are other women who feel that they cannot afford to spend more than that sum. Yet both these classes of women are fastidious in their tastes, both look for and appreciate quality. To them this millinery makes a particular appeal, offering, as it does, choice of new, smart hats, as carefully made, as well trimmed as far more expensive "creations" elsewhere, and yet within the limit they set themselves.

MODES for AUTUMN—show many soft hats of velvet, simply but effectively trimmed. Hats with stiffer brims are fashioned of velvet or duvetyne, many with facings and flanges of beaver. Wide brimmed hats often have their brims trimmed as well as stiffened by rows and rows of stitching.

New blouses are shown here, each one expressing in a different way the daintiness, smartness and individuality that the forecast of the fashions for the new season predicts. They are modestly priced and the workmanship is typical of our merchandise, thorough and careful.

How pretty a square necked blouse can be is demonstrated by one of crepe de chine. The neck is bordered with an insertion of wide lace and bound with crepe de chine as are the cuffs. Rows of pin tucks trim the yoke. It buttons down the back on a broad pleat. Illustrated $6.49

Georgette was used to make a charming button in the back blouse. The round collar, wide loose sleeves and panel at the front are adorned with rows and rows of Val. lace and tiny pin tucks. Illustrated $6.94

A round Dutch collar and a simulated vestee trimmed with Val. lace and puffings of georgette help the small pearl buttons little tucks and a diminutive black satin bow to make a most becoming style of a blouse in georgette. Illustrated $6.49
